

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

[0094] A small implantable stimulator(s) with at least two electrodes is small enough to have the electrodes located adjacent to a peripheral nerve at least partially responsible for sensations in a region experiencing chronic pain. The small stimulator provides a means of stimulating a nerve(s) when desired, and may be implanted via a minimal surgical procedure.